More than half of older Americans lack the skills to gather and understand medical information. Providers must simplify, researchers say. After a diagnosis of heart failure, moderate drinkers tended to live longer than those who drank more heavily or didn't drink at all. Depression: One very common symptom that people experience when they quit Adderall is that of depression. The depression may be more extreme than you have ever experienced in your life. This is thought to be a result of having lowered levels of dopamine in the brain. Additionally some people become depressed because they no longer have the energy, quick-wit, and mental spark that Adderall provided. Certain individuals actually take Adderall for treatment-resistant depression because it works so well. It is natural to feel depressed when you stop this medication. makes it a lot easier for me to get better at [my work], because I'm eager to learn and kind of obsessive. Im in college. so i first started to talk adderall last year at this time. it worked great nothing went wrong exepct my sleep. then during the summer when i was not in school i stopped talking it. when i came back to school and started talking it, my first check up said i was ok. then last week i went in and the doctor said i had a high haert rate (114). i went back for a nother check up 1 day later and it was about the same. so i am asking do you think this change in heart rate will pass or do i need to get off the adderall, or is there something else i can do to help bring my heart rate down? There is only one way to do this. . First of all, was the prescription filled and you lost the bottle or did you lose the paper prescription. My Drs have this same policy and as previously posted, it is difficult to get around this. Your best bet would be to file a lost/stolen report with the police. This will at least show the Dr that you are serious and that you are not trying to pull a fast one. Too many people have used this excuse to get double prescriptions and/or to divert so it is just legally dangerous for Drs but things can happen on occasion. Either way, be prepared for your doc to watch you closely. I had a situation with a previous pain doc where a weeks worth of medications got wet in a mediset and melted together in one big puddle. I had gone on a trip and put a nasal spray bottle in the same plastic bag with my meds and through the mountains with altitude changes the nasal spray leaked and wet all that weeks meds. If we get his prescription filled through our current HMO pharmacy, he has to pay a co-pay of about $35 per scrip. If he walks into the pharmacy at our grocery store, he pays $1.25. Do you know if you can get medicare/medicaid prices and still get mail order meds with Blue Cross? I think you mentioned that was who you had. And, yes, I know, my mileage may vary. We will be looking closely this year at changing health carriers after about 30 years at the HMO that I was happy with for the most part. NeedyMeds is a national nonprofit patient assistance program resource. NeedyMeds maintains a database of pharmaceutical company and private PAPs. You need a new script each time. What is the best alternative to Adderall, whether prescription, over the counter, or holistic?. Hi JC— Thanks for the report from the front lines! I agree about independently owned pharmacies. I have to say, CVS was the worst with the Concerta debacle, continuing to foist the downgraded generics on customers. Walgreen's did a MUCH better job. I'm glad you found a workable solution. g. Is this answer still relevant and up to date?. How is a one year refill prescription get covered?. Price Comparison for the Most Popular ADHD Medications. This all leaves me confused.. I just picked up a script for provigil and adderall IR, and am going to try the provigil for a few weeks as well as trying the IR from a different mfg. Idk what could be going on. The pharma supply chain is so dynamic and convoluted it's a pain to do extensive research or keep up with things.. Okay, that information should at least get you started in exploring your options. Please write any questions in a comment, and I'll address those in a future post. The psychiatrist began writing on his prescriptions "generic okay; Barr/TEVA ONLY." That did the job! We have only been using the formulation by Barr/TEVA since. Sometimes the pharmacist will need to call around if they don't have it, but it's worth it! I realize this is a delayed post—and I'm hoping you the prior post helped you with your problem by now! Be well. It's been getting very tough for my son who is 9. He was on amphetamine salts (generic) for a few years now and it's seeming not to be working any longer. There has been increased dosage and even a switch to generic Concerta and bumped twice and still no change except tics. He has an appointment Friday and we are wondering if he just needs the name brand. There is only so many times we will bump the meds. He is already taking 20mg and no change

My insurance recently stopped paying for my name brand Adderall prescription. I talked to the pharmacist & they assured me that the generic was not only exactly the same medication as the name brand but also made by the same company. That was 3 months ago & although I saw very little difference at first, I can now see a steady decline in my focus & concentration. Has anyone else experienced this when switching from name brand & generic Adderall? Penny ADDitude Community Moderator, Author & Mentor on Parenting ADHD, Mom to teen w/ ADHD, LDs, and autism. As a central nervous system stimulant, Adderall is used to treat disorders like ADHD and narcolepsy. But can you overdose on the medication? Is it. . Your doctor may write you a prescription for one strength of Adderall, then after re-evaluating you, decide a different strength is necessary - or you may tell him it fell in the toilet and he may give you the benefit of the doubt once and give you another one. There is no limit on what your doctor can do as far as prescribing you any type of controlled substance. Even if he writes prescriptions for hundreds of oxycontin for a hundred patients every day, it's legal. I have asked DEA agents about this, since I've known a few doctors who have done this. They have told me that as long as their records are in order, there's nothing they can do about it, since it's technically not illegal. 99% of doctors would not do this, since it would not be in the patient's best interest to do so - but legally, there's no reason they can't. I take care of cancer patients and have written a hundred controlled substance prescriptions in a week on a few occasions - the number of times the DEA or OKBNDD (the state narcotics agency) have asked me about it in 35 years is - zero. Similarly, pharmacies will fill legitimate controlled substance prescriptions as long as they know they are actually from a doctor with the proper credentials. Schedule II substances, like Adderall, require a written prescription - they can't be called in. Neither can they be "refilled" - a new paper prescription is required for each bottle. A relatively new rule requires us to check the PMP (prescription monitoring program) website before writing the first prescription for a new patient and then every six months for established patients - just to make sure they aren't getting prescriptions for controlled substances from multiple physicians. For basically all types of drugs, your insurance will pay for a refill (or in the case of a schedule II drug - fill a new one with a paper prescription) a few days before your current prescription will run out (based on the number of pills and the instructions for taking them). If you pay for them yourself, there's no limit . · Author has 205 answers and 877.2k answer views. Since this HMO just joined hands with Kaiser Permanente, against the wishes of many of the HMO members, we are considering changing insurance carriers during open season. I don't have insurance and cant afford these ridiculous janumet 50-1000 prices. who are these drugs for, certainly the average American cant afford it. The pharmaceutical companies are raping Americans. They should be ashamed and I am sure will pay for it upon their demise. I was told by CVS in Chesterfield, Va this drug is 500.00 for a 30 day supply. With my insurance it dropped to 200.00 but this is not right. I can not afford to pay this much a month. You are killing hard working Americans. Dominic if I have at look at my experience then she should be ok as long as you responded in time and the doctors treated her right, she will however be very irritated and moody when she wakes up and whatever you do, don't let them put restraints on her. it will make her more angry. just support her and show her a lot of love, but don't treat her like she is damaged. My heart stopped while I was in hospital and they gave me adrenalin and CPR and electroshock. but I eventually came back by myself. so don't give up on your wife. The only way you could possibly get a new prescription for the month would be to call the police and have them fill out a lost/stolen prescription report. When that is done, you can contact your doctor and let them know you filled out a police report and then they may be willing to prescribe you a new prescription. Hope this helps! Respectfully, Jay. I think they are all reaping what we have to pay including the politicians since they voted themselves not t have to go with the AFC act!!!!. Thanks Mike, this website is totally saving my life. Half life– When administering Adderall normally, the average elimination half-life for d-amphetamine occurs at 9– 11 hours post dose vs. 11.5– 14 hours for l-amphetamine. The mean elimination half-life for Adderall XR is about the same as for Adderall instant release, but varies according to age and body mass. Adderall testing: How long does Adderall stay in the system? Adderall is made up of a combination of amphetamine salts: Dextroamphetamine Saccharate, Amphetamine Aspartate, Dextroamphetamine Sulfate and Amphetamine Sulfate. These substances can be measured in hair, oral fluid, sweat, or urine as part of drug testing. In fact, blood tests are used to distinguish therapeutic use of Adderall from abuse. This is why doctors and employers use drug testing in the first place: to tell if you are addicted to Adderall, or not. And urine tests can detect Adderall for days after your last dose. But how long does Adderall stay in your system exactly? Positive tests for Adderall depend upon length, frequency, mode of administration and amount of use. In other words, the longer and heavier you've been using Adderall, the more likely it is that Adderall is detected in your body and the more likely you will experience withdrawal from Adderall is you stop dosing. Urine testing can generally detect use 1-4 days after your last dose of amphetamine but you can test positive for amphetamines a week following heavy chronic use. Problems with Adderall? Do you think that you have a problem with Adderall? Are you mixing alcohol and Adderall? Are you snorting or smoking or injecting Adderall? Hi, I am a 34 yr old woman with ADD. I am 5'7", 160 lbs. Ho health conditions that I'm aware of. I am currently taking Adderall 30mg in the morning. I went to the Drs office the other day and they took my pulse and it was around 125 beats per minute. The techs asked if I felt ok after taking my pulse. I felt a little out of breath, nothing I felt was bothersome. I asked my Dr afterwards about it and he didnt think it was anything to worry about. But my old Dr would be concerned when my heart rate was like 105bts per minute. Since that last visit I only took my pill once and started having panic attacks because I am so stressed that it might be dangerous. So I'm feeling awful and wondered if I should just try to take it again and see what happens. Do you think that my heart rate is too high or is this typical? changer for me. As of 2016, my doctor was able to submit my prescription electronically to my pharmacy each month, saving me the hassle of emailing, picking up and dropping it off each month. Prior to 2016, I was told schedule II class drugs could not be sent electronically (I didn't fact check this so I don't know if that's accurate). But apparently something changed as of this year as my doctor's office is now able to and have heard the same thing from others in the city who see different doctors. 2. Doctors still are not allowed to call these prescriptions in over the phone however, which I'm sure we all assumed but just making a note. 3. I have yet to find a doctor in NYC that is willing to prescribe more than a 30 day supply at one time, so I still have to submit a new refill request each month to my doctor and schedule an in-person visit with him every 4 months. Both of which can still be a huge pain. 4. Avoid chain drug stores in NYC— Over the past 10 years I've tried them all (CVS, RiteAid, Walgreens, Duane Reade) and my experience with each has always been consistently awful, especially at their larger midtown locations. If you go to any of these chains with an Adderall prescription you will

4. "No, we cannot call your doctor for refills. I am sure most of you have called your doctor's office and heard the recording that states, "If you are needing a refill, please contact your pharmacy." While that is true for most medications, it is not the case with stimulants. Class II medications like stimulants legally cannot be refilled.

Additionally, pharmacies typically cannot send refill requests due to legal restrictions and/or software incompatibilities. This may change in the future as more and more state boards of pharmacy legalize the electronic transmission of controlled prescriptions." .
